MEMORANDUM FOR Brave Rifles Leaders

SUBJECT: Brave Rifles Reading List for Operation Iraqi Freedom

1. US, Coalition, and Iraqi forces are conducting counterinsurgency operations in Iraq. While the fundamentals of cavalry combat operations clearly apply to fighting in Iraq, counterinsurgency operations demand that leaders possess a very broad base of knowledge and understand how military operations effect the political situation. Religious, ethnic, and social dynamics make the situation in Iraq particularly complex. Leaders must understand those dynamics and how our presence and actions affect them. The enemy's use of urban and restrictive terrain and his ability to blend into the civilian population demand that leaders become expert in MOUT, civil-military operations, combined operations with Iraqi forces, and the development of tactical intelligence. This reading list is meant to guide self study and serve as a basis for professional reading programs at the squadron and troop levels. The knowledge gained from reading, thinking about, and discussing this material will permit leaders to better prepare their troopers for combat and assist leaders in taking the initiative when they encounter complex situations in Iraq.

2. Doctrine and TTPS: We possess a solid doctrinal foundation for operations in Iraq. Leaders must be familiar with our doctrine and our Standard Operating Procedures. Our SOPs prescribe techniques and reports to be used throughout the Regimental battle group. SOPs allow for standardized execution of critical mission essential tasks in order to facilitate cooperation between units and to promote the mutual confidence and dependability that is necessary to fighting units. Uniform execution of certain tasks and battle drills add speed and coordination to our actions in training and in combat. Doctrinal knowledge and SOPs cannot replace common sense or the leader's ability to adapt and seize the initiative through aggressive action. They do give leaders a baseline for common action.

10. Psychological/Ethical Dimensions of Combat: Initial reports show that one in six soldiers returning from OIF and OEF are showing symptoms of combat trauma. Studies show that soldiers suffer greater combat stress in an urban environment than in a conventional environment. Therefore, leaders must put careful thought into their OPTEMPO. As far as the ethical dimensions of combat, leaders must prevent their troopers from performing illegal, immoral acts in combat. Abu Gharayb showed the impact of a few soldiers doing the wrong thing. West Point's Behavioral Science and Leadership Department will provide our Regiment with material that should help our leaders with this subject. In the meantime, here are some books and articles that should help us better understand the psychological/ethical dimensions of combat.
